October 9—Patrick Henry and Dorothy Dandridge.

By MARY MARSHALL.

"In the case of Henry," writes Hugh Blair Grigby, "the cradle began to rock in his house in his 13th year and was rocking at his death in his 33rd." Few men could boast of having done better than Patrick Henry in the matter of parenthood and it would be hard to find a man of equal prominence in American history who had so many children. There were in all seventeen, six by the first and eleven by the second.

Apparently Patrick Henry was as good a husband as he was a father and a contemporary of his writes and says: "Patrick Henry was perhaps the best husband in the world. It is said that he never took any important step without first consulting Dolly, his wife."

At the time of his second marriage Patrick Henry was 41 years old, and had been a widower for about a year. The wedding took place 139 years ago today. The bride was Dolly or Dorothy Dandridge, whose father was an uncle of Martha Washington.

Both Patrick Henry and his wife belonged to the true old Virginia aristocracy and though Henry himself was a man of tremendous activity he and his family dwelt in the ease and luxury made possible by a very large number of negro slaves, devoted and loyal to the family to which they belonged. In the inventory of Patrick Henry's will there is a very interesting list of these servants, giving the names of not less than sixty-seven. Strangely enough, in the list there are but eleven teaspoons and eleven knives and forks.

In a copy of this will in the possession of the second Mrs. Henry's mother we find these words: "My daughter Dolly was so much younger than her husband that she retained her bloom past the century's end, re-married and lived until the year 1831."

Yes, the beloved Dolly did remarry and this in spite of the fact that Patrick Henry was in hope that she never would seek this consolation and that she would remain Mrs. Henry till her death. So much did he hope this in fact, that in his will after a very bountiful provision for her he added: "But in case my said wife shall marry again, in that case I revoke and make void every gift, legacy, authority or power herein mentioned, and order, will and direct, she my said wife, shall have no more of my estate than she can recover by law; nor shall she be guardian to any of my children, or executrix of this my will."

However, the still blooming widow, in spite of her nine children, and in

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT ULLER, Originator of "The Married Life," Author of "The Journal of a Neglected Wife," "The Woman Alone," Etc.

Warren Proves that He Knows the Ropes at a Smart Cabaret Supper.

(Copyright, 1916.)

This series is a continuation of "The Married Life," produced by Mabel Herbert Uller for four years. "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," appearing exclusively in this paper, is the only series now being written by Mabel Herbert Uller.

Flashing signs threw their changing colors over the high-tailed opera-cloaked audience that poured out from the latest Broadway success. The glistering cars and taxicabs that blocked the street honked their way to the curb as the electric figures blazed their numbers.

A glimpse of jewel-buckled slippers and startling lengths of silken hose, as each car received its party and made way for the next.

"How about Shirley's for supper?" suggested Warren. "Pretty lively there," "Fine," agreed Mr. Foster, who, like all Westerners, was eager to make the rounds of the white-light district.

The revolving doors of Shirley's, two blocks beyond, were urging in their share of the after-theater crowd. While Warren and Mr. Foster looked their coats, Helen stepped into the rose-paneled dressing-room, where a tip-expectant maid took her wraps and smoothed the chiffon flounces of her evening gown.

"Something doing," grunted Warren, as they entered the crowded dining-room. "We'll have to put up a bluff for a table here." Then to the approaching head waiter, "Curtis—W. E. Curtis. Table for three."

"Yes, sir," drawing the list of tables reserved from his pocket. Then as his pencil ran down the column, "I don't find your name, sir."

"You don't?" angrily. "Well, I'm not responsible for your bookkeeping. Do I get a table or not?"

"Just a moment, sir. If you reserved a table, there's some mistake. I'll see what I can do for you." Again consulting his list, with an anxious survey of the few tables marked "Reserved," he led them to one on the very edge of the dancing space.

"How about this?" grinned Warren. "But, dear, it wasn't fair," protested Helen uneasily. "You know you hadn't reserved a table."

"Well, we'll put over anything we can at these joints. You needn't have any scruples—wait till you see the check. They'll soak us all right. Hello, that's what you might call abbreviated," as a girl whisked by in an extremely short-skirted, low-bodiced dress.

"Look like she made that out of a remnant," laughed Mr. Foster. "Well, if they keep on cutting 'em off at both ends—they'll soon be wearing ruffled lampshades. What'd you want to drink?"

"Yes, sir. Just the same—white bread?" writing down the order.

"Hold on—you don't put that over! We're not ordering another sandwich! You're bringing it to replace the one you carried off!"

"That's impossible, sir. The order has to go through the kitchen." "It does, eh? Where's your head waiter?" "I'll see about this."

"Oh, dear, don't make a fuss," pleaded Helen. "I don't want any more—really I don't." "I'll have that sandwich just the same. I'll show him we can't be pushed around. Where's that head waiter?"

"Just a moment, sir," propitiatingly. "I'll see what I can do." "Well, you get another sandwich here double quick—or you'll see what I can do to go through the kitchen."

"I wish you'd been along last night," chuckled Mr. Foster. "The waiter spotted me for a Westerner—and what he did to me was a shame. Out of a whole broiled chicken he served me a piece of the breast—carried the rest to a side table and that's the last I saw of it. And the vegetables—a spoonful of the dish was whisked away."

"Huh, I know that game. I'd have put up a roar that would've raised the roof." "Allow me, ma'am." It was the chastened waiter at Helen's elbow.

She swept her chateaufort from the table as with obsequious attention he placed before her a fresh sandwich, with the caviar generously spread.

"Now bring us some of those burning brandied figs," ordered Warren curtly. "I forget what you call them—figs—a Bonfire?"

"Figs a la Diable, sir," deferentially. "And one portion of Roquefort served for three. Just one portion, mind." "Yes, sir, one portion for three," meekly, writing the order.

"Why, can you do that?" asked Mr. Foster when the man had disappeared. "It says here under chicken, 'Per person.'"

"The stars incline, but do not compel."

Monday, October 9, 1916.

Friendly stars rule today, according to astrology. Mars, Mercury and Saturn are all in strongly benefic aspect, while Jupiter and Neptune are faintly adverse. Persons whose vocations are connected with machinery or construction have the best direction today. Engineers should benefit particularly.

It is a lucky rule for physicians, surgeons and chemists, who have the prognostication of added knowledge as well as increased opportunities.

Hospitals have the forecast of vast endowments and improvements that will enable cities to safeguard health to an amazing extent.

Benefits to hospitals will accrue through realization of needs brought about by epidemics which will alarm the seaport cities.

The seers declare that an American millionaire has won one of the greatest fortunes in the world through his study of occultism and that he will be directed toward philanthropic efforts that will benefit the whole world.

There is a prophecy that an adept will visit the United States next winter in the guise of a poet and that he will do much to awaken the spirit of universal brotherhood.

The death of a university head is foreshadowed and there may be a woman called to his place.

Again the stars indicate fair fortunes for musicians, who will have extraordinary opportunities to be heard in all the large cities.

The awakening of the United States to the possibilities of the country as a musical center will bring about much activity in opera as well as concert presentation next winter astrologers predict.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of unexpected benefits and help from friends. The outlook for the year is most encouraging. Girls should be careful in their acquaintances.

Children born on this day should be successful all through life. These subjects of Libra are active and industrious usually. Happy marriage is probable.

The Modern Way To Clean Silver

Demonstration Daily of the Silver-Clean Pan process of cleaning Silver instantly without laborious work.

A device for removing tarnish from articles made of gold or silver, solid or plated, by what is known as an electro-chemical action, which is brought about by placing in the Silver-Clean Pan water, and adding for every 2 or 3 pints one tablespoonful of common baking soda and one tablespoonful of ordinary table salt. Stir until dissolved, and the solution is ready for use.

Silverware that has been accumulating tarnish for months or years may be cleaned by the Silver-Clean Pan method, which is absolutely harmless to silverware or the person using it. The Silver-Clean Pan is made in all sizes from that for the small family to those for the largest manufacturing jewelers, stores, restaurants, drug stores, etc.
